THE BLOSSOMING TIME.

The violet, in bunches of purple,
Blooms sweet on the bosom of Spring;
The blossoms, up high on the larches,
Of summer, of summer-time sing.
The primrose light the green shadows
On the hillsides, and the green shadows
Are deep in the depths of covers.
The nightingale changeth his hymn.

It's that day; but I speak of the morning,
When sunbeams glace into the wood,
And lay in long passes, golden,
Like paths for the spirits to tread.
The blossoms are singing in chorus,
And the birds, which voices them all;

Up there on the aspen he carols—
The aspen so light and so sail.

The sparrow sport on the bushes,

The hawks over the rose-blossom sleep,

The larks over the green corn and clover,

The risks and the close-huddled sheep,

Bear upward his prayer unto Heaven;

He's the priest of the blue upper Heaven;

Nor rests he a day in the seven.

Tis a time full of hope and of promise,

This youth of the blossoming year,

All is pleasure on earth and in ether,

No clouding of sorrow or fear.

There is no failing in the power of the bairns,

Yet, low in each bosom the branches,

This stirs to the light every hour.

—All the Year Round.

CAREER OF A SHAM MARQUIS.

A romance of swindling has just been tried before the Paris Court of Correctional Police, the prisoner, who had evidently read "Gli Uscia," is a Spaniard, Eusebio y Ribate Garcia, aliasing himself Marquis d'Utero. In spite of his name "Don," Eusebio is but the son of a bricklayer, in fact, he is a common laborer, and has been for some time past a swindler. He was born at Madrid, and as will be seen from the sequel, was on the point of marrying the daughter of a wealthy Hebrew merchant in this city, when, in the very nick of time, his fraud was discovered. He fled on the 16th of February last, one of the first days of the new year. The Vivientes much frequented by Spaniards.

He looked every inch a gentleman, and displayed, with studied negligence, a pocket-book, the contents of which were a sum of money, more than twice the hotel-porter treated him with all the respect due to a man whose purse seemed so well filled, who called himself a marquis, and looked not unlike one. He even took much interest in his lodger's recommendations, and seemed to be a good deal interested in him. To him, it is evident, that the Company's way may seem a little dim at first, but they will both prove highly creditable to him.

He was a swindler, and he had only about 20,000 francs in his pocket-book, and he would soon require it, as he came to Paris to get married, &c., &c.

He had brought him by month, spared no expense, and though he never paid his hotel bill, so conducted himself as to inspire the candid landlord with unlimited trust in himself; so that when he came home one day after being paid up, he said to him, "I have to go to Spain." There is room for one hundred wells. A perfect tide, clear of all incumbrances, is evidently destined to the Company.
